Character Defamation and Libel and Slander Laws

Defamation includes any false statements, written or spoken, that are designed to hurt or damage a person's reputation. Defamation in written form is known as libel, while slander is the term for defamation that is spoken. Constitutional law protects our right of free speech, but this does not include libel and slander because one person's freedom of speech should not harm another person. That is why Employment Lawyer New York's defamation attorneys will invest so much time and energy in protecting its clients from libelous and slanderous insults.

Once you have been defamed, you will likely lose your job and have difficulty in getting hired for a new one. This is why defamation is such a serious offense: it can cause permanent damage to your resume and make your life miserable in the future. It is difficult to undo the damage caused by slanderous speech and libelous words, but our New York defamation lawyers can make certain that the offenders are punished. New York defamation lawyers from Employment Lawyer New York pride themselves in ensuring that false words about their clients are never exchanged or published, so hire a NYC defamation lawyer or a NY long island defamation lawyer to represent you and preserve your reputation.
